

What's New!

for the week of November 30, 2009

I hope you all had a wonderful Thanksgiving and now you are ready for the frenzy ahead.

There are 3 sew days this week—tomorrow at Quilting Sisters in Rocky Point; Tuesday at Kate's Quilted Rooster and Friday at Fountain Plaza in Medford—please try to join us.

The Snowflake Festival in Klamath Falls begins this week and Project Linus is the featured non-profit. We could receive donations of fabric and/or $$$$$. I should have organized a float for the parade, but it just didn't happen—sorry.

This quilt was made by Susan Morgado and was sent to the Snowball Express. We sent a total of 13 blankets to this event for children of servicemen and women who have been injured or killed. Thanks to everyone who helped in this endeavor.

Quilting Tip Of The Week - I don't buy backing for my quilt when I purchase the fabric for the top but I do buy binding. If you're working from one line of fabric, who's to say that line will still be available when you're ready to put on binding? And if it's a bunch of fabrics you've pulled together, you never know if you're going to find anything that will go, and who remembers what all the fabrics in the quilt look like by the time you get ready to buy binding. Of course one of my favorite things is a scrappy binding from all of the fabrics in the quilt.
